

For and Against Mobile Phones

In this essay I am going to analyse the problems connected with mobile telephones. Like anything else mobile phones has got its advantages and disadvantages.

On the one hand, mobile telephones are very useful and handy because you can be reachable anywhere and at any time. They are especially necessary in case of emergency when you need help.

On the other hand, mobile telephone has also got its drawbacks which may be rather annoying or even dangerous.

Firstly, it can take away your privacy. Your private life is greatly disturbed if you are available to problems all day and night. Everyone should have time for his or her personal life.

Moreover, mobile phones are extremely dangerous if you speak over the phone while driving a car. Handsfree system should be a must if you cannot avoid using the telephone in the car.

Last but not least, mobile phones have been discovered to be harmful to your health. Doctors say that using it too often and for too long time may cause brain cancer. It is said to be especially dangerous for children.

In conclusion, it is everyone's decision to use the mobile telephone or not. But before buying one, you should surely consider thoroughly all its pluses and minuses.

If I were the Minister of Education in Estonia

There are several hot problems with the system of education in Estonia. In this essay I am going to analyse what I would change if I were the Minister of Education in Estonia.

To begin with, I believe the changes in the timetable would improve the result of students' work. In my opinion each student should have the right to make up his/her own timetable. If I were the Minister of Education in Estonia, I would make some lessons choosable. As a result, each student could choose the subjects to take.

Secondly, there is the problem of school lunch. For many families it is too expensive and therefore their children have to spend the whole schoolday feeling hungry. I would suggest providing free lunch to all students, not only for younger ones.

Last but not least, special attention has to be paid sporting facilities at schools. Many schools cannot afford new sporting equipment. I would give more money to schools for construction and renovation of gyms and sports grounds.

In conclusion, if I were the Minister of Education in Estonia, I would not change the whole schoolsystem, but I would try to make studying at school more enjoyable.

How should the government help young families start their life

In modern society there are many ways how the government might support young families to start their life. In this essay I am trying to point out some of them.

To start with, the government might help young couples to get a decent living place. To do so, young families should be given state loan at possibly good conditions. It should be paid back in quite a long period.

Next, companies very often refuse to employ young people without any former experience. It would be nice if the state guaranteed a job with a reasonable salary to everyone after his/her studies.

Finally, the taxes for young families with children ought to be lower. The taxes should depend on the number of children in the family - the more children you have, the fewer taxes you have to pay.

To sum it up, young families are our future, only they can increase our population and develop the society. That is why the government must find possibilities to help young people start their life.
